

Lets talk about Halloween

There is a showcase here:- <http://polymerclay.craftgossip.com/polymer-clay-halloween-showcase/2007/10/08> and there are some monsters here: <http://www.funclay.com/How-to%20Projects/index.html> (I think I found these on Polymer Clay Daily)

If you can bear the adverts (and the concept) here is a weird video of how to make a miniature coffin out of foam and decorate it with polymer clay: http://www.ehow.com/video_5574690_making-mini-coffins-halloween.html There are some strange people on the internet!

On a lighter note look at these polymer clay babies – all Halloween characters:

And remember, too, that you can buy Glow in the Dark Premo here:

http://www.clayaround.com/product_info.php?cPath=15&products_id=63

Or Fimo Glow in the dark here: http://www.clayaround.com/product_info.php?products_id=183

I looked up Polymer Clay on Wikipedia – try it. It tells us that the article has multiple issues. Maybe we, in the community can add to, or correct the entry!

Do not be put off by the title 'Metal Clay Tool Suppliers' when you look at this most amazing collection of suppliers all in one place <http://www.metalclayacademy.com/suppliers/tools-uk.html>

And finally I am launching a new product - a starter polymer clay kit. The contents are:

Kato Primary colours (4oz), Kato Black 2oz, Kato white 2oz, tissue blade, acrylic roller, wooden skewer, 240,800 and 1200 sandpaper, buffing pad, tray to hold tools, colour chart and instructions.

The kit is retailing at £20

As you are, of course, seasoned clayers, maybe you would like to encourage people new to claying to invest in this comprehensive kit, complete with basic instructions.

I am off to the Artisan Exhibition in Warwickshire with the kit:

<http://www.meridienneexhibitions.co.uk/our-events-detail.php?id=0000000011> – if you are in the area do come and say hello.

And as I am away for two days any orders may not get the prompt delivery that you expect from us.

The most successful people are those who are good at plan B.
